About The Palfi

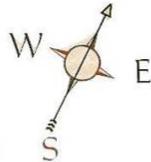

Twice yearly, in July and August, dirt and sand are brought in and laid around the edges of the Piazza del Campo to transform it into a horse racing track. This traditional race, which has ancient roots, still showcases the fierce rivalry which still remains between the 17 wards of the city.

The race is a real anything-goes/no rules race where the riders, all bareback, each fly the colours and standard of their own ward with much pride and passion displayed. Horses race three times around the hazardous piazza circuit with the winner being the first horse across the line whether the rider is still mounted or not.

Contenders are all armed with whips which they are allowed to use on their own horse as well as other horses and riders and winning is as much about impeding other riders as is about being the best.

All of Siena turns out to watch the race which means the square is crammed full and victory is followed by long parties where the winner's standards are proudly displayed for the year until the next races.
